

Kitchen Table Conversations Evaluation August 2015 Survey Results

5 people completed the online survey by 12 August 2015. Their results are below:

Q1: How would you rate the Kitchen Table Conversations process?

Q2: How many conversations were you involved in?

Q3: What worked well?

- The structured discussion and bringing together different points of view
- Having the talking piece. Getting together people to talk about important issues.
- Listening to each other using the rock
- It was interesting to learn the topics that other people considered to be issues and how it aligned with my views
- Sharing of ideas. Meeting like-minded folks

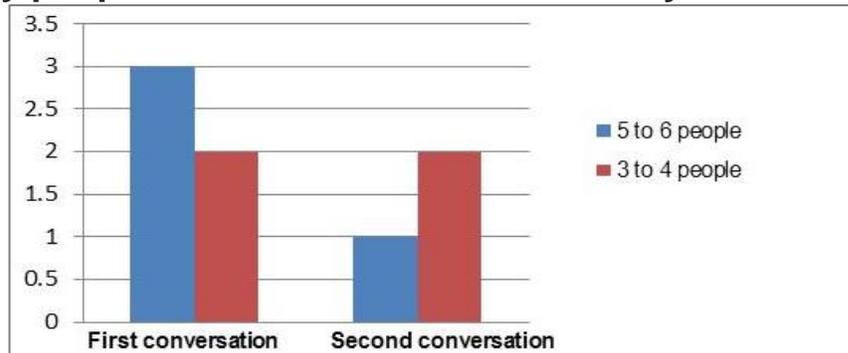

Q4: What would you do differently?

- Summarise more frequently and come up with a top points list.
- Ask people with different viewpoints.
- Place a time limit on how long people can speak for.
- Learn more about what the purpose of a kitchen table conversation is before going to my first conversation.
- More action oriented outcomes.

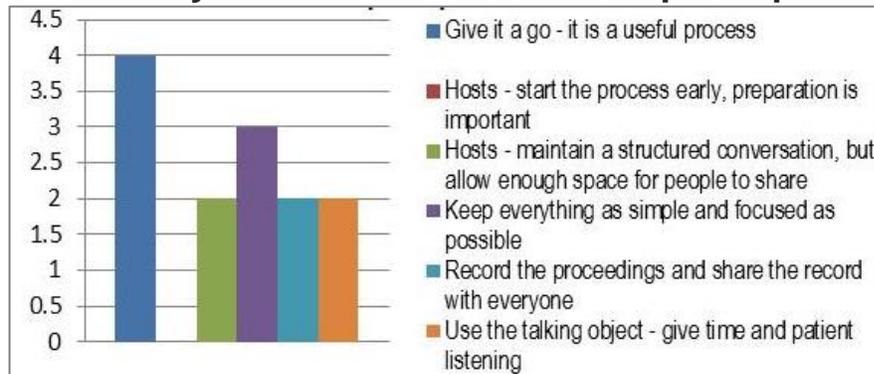

Q5: What was the greatest insight that emerged for you?

- That the KTC conversations themselves are excellent vehicles for social change.
- Supporting new leaders in our community is key for creating greater change.
- The value of listening to other and not butting in.
- Learning what a kitchen table conversation is.
- How complex this all is - and how to get the issues turned into action oriented wording and take aways.

Q6: How many people attended each conversation you were involved in?

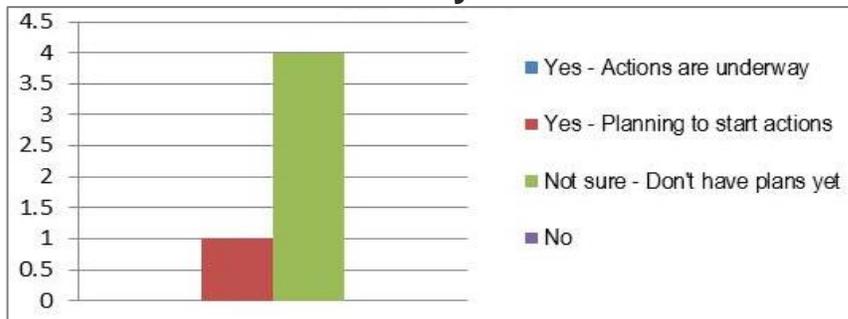

Q7: What advice would you offer future hosts and participants?

- Make sure the facilitator and scribe are not the same person.

Q8: Will actions be taken as a result of your conversations?

Q9: Do you have any other comments or suggestions you would like us to know about?

- The process was really useful and enjoyable, however as it is quite open it doesn't necessarily lead to clear, tangible, outcomes. Although this is ok, without a sharp focus it is unlikely to be sustained into the future in its current form.
